New York, Oct. 19. (AP) —

Allen W. Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence agency, said tonight the force most feared by Russia's rulers is the desire of their own people for freedom.

The desire of all men to be free, Dulles said in an address at the twenty-third annual New York Herald Tribune forum, "haunts the rulers of the Kremlin today."

The democracies, he said, "can and must exploit" this fear, which he termed the "Achilles heel" of the Communist dictatorship.

"We must make the most of the latent but nonetheless real force of freedom that has not been killed behind the iron curtain, even in Russia itself," Dulles added.
